Norwich Campus Faculty Member Publishes Military History
On February 8, 2007, the Routledge Press released Ottoman Army Combat Effectiveness in WWI: A Comparative Study by Dr. Ed Erickson. The book is an academic study of the Turks’ effectiveness in battle against the British during the First World War. Erickson, an adjunct professor of social science at the Norwich Campus, is an authority on the Turkish Army in the early twentieth century. He is a retired regular army officer and author of numerous books, chapters and articles. Erikson has additional works in progress including The Sultan’s Army, A History of the Ottoman Military from 1300-1918 for Praeger Publishing (due out in 2007) and an annotated translation of an Ottoman officer’s diary for Isis Press in Istanbul (due out in 2008). He and his wife live in Norwich.

Norwich Campus Student Internships Available

Have you thought about making an internship part of your degree program? The Norwich Campus is seeking motivated and academically eligible students to fill existing internship openings with public and private sector organizations in Chenango County.

Internships offer many benefits:

- They complement and enrich your academic program by helping to connect classroom theory with its application in a business, government, or non-profit agency environment.
- They can increase your readiness for paid employment and often lead directly to employment with the sponsoring organization.
- They give students the experience they need to be more competitive in the workplace.
- They are tailored to meet your academic and career learning objectives.

The following internship options are available NOW for qualified accounting, business, CITA, office administration, and liberal arts students as well as students interested in paralegal studies:

- City of Norwich
- Law office
- Judge Howard Sullivan’s office
- STRIDE (Equine-assisted activities for the handicapped)

Additional internships are pending.

Contact Norwich Campus Internship Coordinator, Nancy Heiss, today (heissne@morrisville.edu or 607-334-5144) to discuss your interests and learn how an internship could be included in your degree program during the current or future terms. Students must be matriculated in a degree program and have successfully completed a minimum of 12 credits. Students must have a GPA of 2.5 or better.
